Thus 1. brother, a resident brother of a fraternity or guild; 2. burgess, one resident in the burgh; 3. in-case, a case of an in-patient, in-patient, one who remains in a hospital while under treatment; 4. in-pensioner, one resident in a charitable institution.

3. With verbs. See IN-¹ pref¹.

4. With advs. and prepositions; as IN-BETWEEN. In (in). The Latin prep. in (with the ablative case) 'in', (with accusative) 'into', occurs in many phrases, of which the chief are given below.

1. in capite, in chief (see CHIEF sb.), holding directly from the crown 1588. 2. in extenso, at full length 1826. 3. in extremis, in the last agonies 1530. 4. in forma pauperis, in the form of a poor person (exempted from liability to pay the costs of an action; see PAUPER sb.), hence, in a humble or abject manner 1592. 5. in infinitum, to infinity, without end 1564. 6. in limine, on the threshold, at the very outset 1804. 7. in loco, in the place of, e p. in loco parentis, in the place or position of a parent 1710. 8. in medias res, into the midst of affairs, into the middle of a narrative 1786. 9. in memoriam, to the memory of. IN-, pref¹, the prep. and adv. IN, in comb. with vbs., vbl. derivs., and other words. In OE. the adv. inn, in, was freely used in collocation with vbs. of motion or change of state. In the infinitive the adv. generally stood before the vb. and in derived vbl. sbs. and adjs. always so. In this position the adv. came at length to be written in comb. with the vb.; hence, many regular compounds with stress on in- thus incoming, income, incomer, indweller, inlet, insight, etc. Other formations, in which the prefix usually has the sense 'in, within, internal', are inborn, inside, inward, etc.

IN- pref², repr. L. in- adv. and prep., used in comb. with vbs. or their derivatives, less commonly with other parts of speech with the into in within on upon onwards against, sometimes expressing onward motion or continuance, sometimes intensive, sometimes transitive, and in other cases with no appreciable force. For Form-history, see EN-, IN-¹, IM-¹, IR-¹.

IN-, pref³, the L. in-, cogn. w. Gr. α-, αν-, Com. Teut. in-, prefixed to adjs. and their derivatives, rarely to other wds., to express negation or privation. In Eng. the modern tendency is to restrict in- to words obviously answering to Latin types, and to prefer the OE. negative un- in other cases, as unavailing, uncertain, undoubted.

IN-, pref⁴, of Teut. origin, prefixed to OE. and ME. adjs., with the sense 'inly', 'intimately', 'thoroughly', and hence 'exceedingly', 'very'.

IN-, suffix¹. Chem. A modification of the chemical suffix -INE², used for the names of neutral substances, such as glycerides, glucosides, bitter principles, colouring matters, which are thus distinguished from names of alkaloids and basic substances in -INE. Some of these were formerly spelt with -ine, esp. destrine, gelatine, margarine, and are still so spelt in non-scientific use.

IN-, suffix², obs. var. of -INE¹ in adjs., as feminine, genuine, etc., also occas. var. of -INE⁴ — L. -inus, as in ruin.

IN-, suffix³, L. fem. suffix found in regina queen, extended in It. or Sp., and thence in Eng. use, to form feminine titles, as empress, and female Christian names, as Alexandrina, etc. It occurs also in concertina, seraphina, etc., names of musical instruments.

IN-, suffix⁴, in wds. which are the neut. pl. of L. adjs. in -inus, and in mod. L. wds. formed after them, used (in agreement with animalis, understood) to form names of groups of animals related to some typical genus, as Bombycina (genus Bombyx), etc.

Inability (inabil'itē). ME. [a. OF. inhabilitate or ad. med. L. inhabilitas; see IN-² and ABILITY.] The condition of being unable; want of ability, physical, mental, or moral; lack of power, capacity, or means. 1b. spec. Bodily infirmity—1834.

Hist.* adjs. the pronunciation is (-in), usual unstressed, but in other words it is very various; cf. divinus (-in), marine (-in), feminus (-in), leusine (-in). Also ruine.

-ine, suffix ², forming adjs., repr. L. -inu a Gr. -ivos, as adamantinus adamantin pratinus pratin, etc. The etym and histol cal pronunciation is (-in), e.g. (pri stin), (zed manin); but cf. crystalline (-in), etc.

-ine, suffix ³, repr. F. -ine, L. -ina, Gr. -iv forming fem. titles, as in Gr. ἡρώς, L. heroina, F. héroïne heroine. See also landgravin margravine

-ine, suffix ⁴, forming sbs., repr. F. -in (-in), L. -ina (-inus), in origin identical with -INE ¹. The adjs. in -inus, -ina were also used subst., as in concupiscimus, -ina concubine, Antoninus Antonine, etc. The Eng. form of the in -inus is -ine, occas. -in; those in -inus give i and Eng. -in, but in Eng. often -ine.

In Romantic, and hence in Eng. in the 1 form -ine (-in), this suffix is greatly used in forming names of derived substances, similitud appellations, diminutives, etc., e.g. dentin gronadine, etc.

-ine, suffix ⁵, Chem., in origin an offshoot of -INE ⁴, as occurring in the names of some derived substances, see GELATIN, -INE ⁴. A first the ending -ine was by some reduced to -in; but recently, in systematic nomenclature -ine is now used (1) in forming names of alkalooids and basic substances, as aconitine etc. which are thus distinguished from names of neutral substances, proteins, etc., in -in (see -IN ¹); and (2) in Hofmann's systematic name of hydrocarbons of the form C_nH_{2n+2} , as ethane or acetylene, C_2H_2 , etc. In the names of the elements, etc., -ine is retained. In pop. and commercial use, -ine is still current in some cases where systematic nomenclature requires -in; see -IN ¹.

-ine as used to form the names of minerals has in a or use been changed to the n species, to -ite, thus chalcosine, erythrine are in Dana chalcocite, erythrite.

A metal, the most abundant and useful of those used in the metallic state; very variously employed for tools, implements, machinery, constructions, and in many other applications.

Pure iron is soft and of a silver-white colour, but is scarcely known; the metal as commonly used has usually an admixture of carbon, and varies in colour from tin-white to dark grey. It is of three kinds, differing in the amount of carbon present: unalloyed iron, or Wrought iron, which is comparatively soft, very tenacious, fusible only at a very high temperature, and capable at a red heat of being hammered or rolled into any required shape; Cast iron, which is hard and brittle, and fusible at a lower temperature; and Steel, which partakes of the properties of both. Iron is very rarely found native, but is obtained from its ores, which are chiefly oxides or salts of the metal. Chemically, iron is a metallic element; symbol Fe (ferrum); atomic weight, 56. In alchemy it was represented by the sign for the planet Mars (♂).

-itious¹, compound suffix of adjs., f. L.
-ici-us + -OUS. These L. endings, from the confusion of c and t in late and med. L. MSS.

inflammatory disease or inflammation of a part.

-i- being orig. either the stem vowel of the radical (e.g. L. suavi-tas suavity), or its weakened repr. (e.g. L. puri-tas purity), rarely a mere connective (e.g. L. auditor-i-tas

-ization, suffix forming nouns of action from vbs. in -IZE: see next.

-ize (also written -ise), suffix forming vbs = F. -iser, It. -izzare, Sp. -izar, ad. late L. -izare, f. Gr. -izein, formative derivative of verbs. The suffix, whatever the element to which it is added, is in its origin the Gr. -izein, L. -izare, and, as the pronunciation is also with z, there is no reason why in English the special French spelling in -izer should ever be followed. Hence here the termination is uniformly written -ize. In current English the following are the chief groups:

1. Words from Greek, or formed on Greek elements. a. with the trans. sense of 'make or conform to, or treat in the way of, the thing expressed by the derivation', as baptize, anathematize, monopolize, etc. b. with the intrans. sense 'to act some person or character, do or follow some practice', as apologize, philosophize, etc.

2. Words formed on Latin adjs or sbs, mostly with the trans. sense 'to make (that which is expressed by the derivation)', as actualize, colonize, satirize, etc.; trans. or intrans. as cicatrize, moradize, etc.; occas. only intrans. as temperize.

3. Words from later sources, as bastardize, jeopardize trans., gormandize intr.

4. Words formed on ethnical adjs., and the like, chiefly trans. as Americanize, Anglicize, etc.

5. Words formed on names of persons, sometimes with the intrans. Gr. sense of 'to act like, or in accordance with', as in Calvinize, but usu. in the trans. sense 'to treat like, or after the method of, or according to the (chemical or other) process of'; as in Boncherize, Boudierize, galbanize, etc.; with other terms, and nonce-words such as Gladstonize, etc., without limit.

6. From names of substances, chemical and other; in the trans. sense of 'to charge, impregnate, treat, or affect with': as alcoholize, oxidize, etc.; so in nonce-words, as Londonize to make like London, etc.

-izer, suffix of agent-n. from vbs. in -IZE

Izzard, var. of IZARD.

J

J (dʒā), the tenth letter of the English alphabet, is, in its origin, a comparatively late modification of the letter I. From the 11th to the 17th c., the letter I represented both the vowel sound of i, and a consonant sound (dʒ). To keep the inconspicuous small distinct, esp. in cursive writing, various socal expedients were employed (see I). Among these, an initial i was often prolonged above or below the line, or both; a final i was generally prolonged below the line, and in both cases the 'tail' in cursive writing at length became a curve. The 'dot' was also used with the tailed form, and thus the j. But this was at first merely a final form of i, used in Latin in such forms as 'filij', and in numerals, as ij xij. It was in the 17th c. that the differentiation of the two forms of the letter took place, i, remaining for the vowel, and j, being used for the consonant, and the capital forms of the latter, J, Ŷ, being introduced.

The sound regularly denoted by the letter j in English is the consonant (dʒ). In hallé lujah it has the sound of the Roman 1-consonant (y). So in proper names or alien terms from German and other languages in which the Roman value of j is retained, as Jen (jēnā), Jaeger, etc. In a few French words distinctly recognized as alien, j has the French sound (ʒ), as déjeuner, etc. In the transliteration of Oriental names, as Jat, Jinghis, etc. j is used with its English value.

1. x The letter (pl. Ŷ, *J*s, *j*s, j.) 2. Short for J-pen, a broad-pointed pen, stamped with the letter j.

11. r Rarely used to express serial order. In the alphabetical designations of the batteries of the Royal Artillery, A, B, C, etc., j is used for the tenth. 2. As a Roman numeral j was formerly used as a final form of i in j, ij, vj, etc.; this j is retained in medical prescriptions. 3. In math and physics, j is used to denote the Jacobian; also Joule's mechanical equivalent of heat.

III. Abbrev. J. stands for various proper names as John, Jane, etc. J. P., Justice of Peace; Jr or junior, J. C. R., junior COMMONS-ROOM.
